GOOGLE ALERTS allows you to filter topics, types of sites, language, geographic locations, and how many results you want to receive. To learn how to create a google alert, you can view the help information on Google here: Create a Google alert.

GOOGLE SCHOLAR is a search database that filters through academic publications. Your search will include articles and books from a variety of academic publishers. You can also set up Google Scholar alerts.

FEEDLY:

Feedly is an excellent way to manage your online reading content.

Having all of your regular reading content in one place directs your attention to one reading source instead of accessing multiple websites where your attention is scattered. It also encourages you to curate your reading content more purposefully.

If you do use Feedly, make sure you add the Art Therapy Resources blog to your feeds: http://arttherapyresources.com.au/blog/

HOW TO SAVE RESEARCH ARTICLES:

My naming system is as follows: article-title-separated-by-dashes-AUTHOR-YEAR.pdf
The author surname is in capitals letters. If the article has multiple authors, I only use the first author's name.

An example of how to save the following article that is located on the following link: http://www.tandfonline.com/doi/full/10.1080/07421656.2016.1226643
